

Target: To answer questions about a story.

There once was a friendly, little badger named Christopher. He lived under a hedge on the edge of a field. Christopher loved to learn new skills and there was nothing he enjoyed more than to make different foods for his friends to try.

One particularly cloudy day Christopher sat in his kitchen and wondered what treats he could make next to surprise his best friends, Philippa the pigeon and Andrew the hedgehog.

Christopher could not decide which treat he wanted to make that day.

'Oh, will my friends like fried banana fritters with warm chocolate sauce or blueberry porridge?' thought Christopher. 'Or perhaps soft, creamy, vanilla fudge?'

Finally, he decided to make the fudge. Christopher was happy and content in the kitchen so he whistled a loud, jolly tune while he stirred the ingredients together in a saucepan. Then, when he had finished stirring and checked that there were no lumps, he tried his best to put the fudge into a tray without spilling anything. Then he left it in the fridge to set.

'Now I must ask my friends Philippa and Andrew to come and try my tasty fudge,' said Christopher to himself. 'Oh I cannot wait to share it with them, I hope the fudge sets in time!'
